

JIM BERRY SCARED

He Thought He Was the Victim of a Midnight Holdup.

HIS CRIES WERE PITIFUL.

Until the Facts Were Learned There Was Great Excitement—Courage Falls Him When He Needs It Most.

A wild Comanche yell, a scream like the wall of a lost soul rang out on the midnight air last night near the corner of Oak and Third streets. The howl was followed by a series of bloodcurdling cries, such as only a crazy man makes, and the entire neighborhood was aroused by the tumult. Those near enough to see, saw a man running west on Third street like mad, with an umbrella pulled down tight over his head.

Passengers fled from before him, believing the flying one to be in the frenzy of insanity; a lady was frightened nearly to death, and, with pallid face, sought refuge in the Standard office. The man with an umbrella sped on past the store like one who flees from the wrath to come, still yelling. He was corralled by a member of the Standard staff on the steps of the Montana, who recognized the wild man as James Berry, who is head clerk for Joseph Peters and has charge of the store in the proprietor's absence.

"I'm shot—Mur-der, P-O-L-I-c-e!" he yelled before answering an inquiry of what was the matter.

"I've been held up (gasp) by two men (gasp) near the church, (gasp) they were behind where we are Golden came by, Oh, dear; one of them had a gun, a big one; Oh-h, where is somebody—I run and one of them chased me a block. He had a white handkerchief over his face. I-I don't know, I can't tell what he looked like—he was tall, about six feet, I guess—Oh, poor Golden, I wonder what they did to him."

Officer Charlie Newman had arrived by this time, and three or four other men came up. Berry was still gasping for wind when they reached the corner of Third and Main street. The policeman led the way towards the scene of the hold-up, but Berry said:

"Oh, no, no; not that way; I won't go there again." At length, with three cohorts, he consented to go and show where it was the highwaymen had been hid, and to look for the remains of his friend, Golden, but he still trembled at shadows and spoke in broken accented syllables.

"No, they didn't shoot; I had my umbrella to protect me from the bullets, you know. If I hadn't they might."

The scene was reached, but nothing could be seen of the bold thugs, only the rain pattered in the puddles on the sidewalk and the electric light from the two corners one block away sputtered and twinkled.

A big member of the Standard staff escorted the shaking young man to his room and offered to put him to bed, but by this time the storm had begun, and an hour later, Berry began to recover his mind. They went then to look up the missing man, Johnny Golden, but curiously he was not yet in his room. Then it dawned upon Berry that he was a victim of his friends, more than of highwaymen, and he set out in quest of them.

After some search the missing Golden was found in a down town resort, none the worse for the episode. Chief of Police Jack White was then secured to escort the valiant member of the Wolfe Tone guards to his home again.

Berry has been unusually unfortunate recently in his adventures. One night not long ago he interfered with Officers O'Brien and Davin while they were arresting the big Butte bruiser, Ed McCormick, for disturbance. Berry was told to go about his business, but persisted and abused the policemen with vile epithets. The officers took him along, too, on the way to jail, and gave him a berth to keep McCormick company. He was afterward released on bonds and paid a fine the next day. The highwaymen are still at large, but their victim is feeling very small this morning.

SELECTED THE SITE.

The City Hall Will Be at the Corner of Commercial and Cedar.

One of the most business-like sessions which the city council has held was the meeting last night. There were no long winded speeches, no squabbles or profitless discussions. The gist of work consisted of some very important matters, too, the chief of which was the selection of a site for the new city hall. By the way business was transacted in this matter it looked as though the aldermen had had a caucus, and if they had any differences, settled them there. Chairman Walkup of the committee appointed to secure prices reported the following list of available property, with the prices asked:

Property on northeast corner of Park avenue and Locust street, 50 feet, $2,100.

Property on the northwest corner of alley separating Main and Hickory street, 50 feet front on Park avenue, $7,000.

Property on corner of Park avenue and Hickory street, southeast corner, 50 feet, $3,000.

Property on northwest corner of Oak and Third street, 50 feet, $5,000.

When Alderman Walkup had finished reading his list Alderman Leiser arose from his corner and introduced the following resolution, moving its adoption.

"Resolved, That the mayor appoint a committee of three members of the city council to enter into a contract for, and to purchase from W. L. Hoge, or the true owners thereof, the lots on the corner of Commercial avenue and Cedar street in the city of Anaconda, and numbered 11 and 12, in block 23, in said city of Anaconda, at the price of $4,000, being the price at which said lots have been offered by the owners thereof, for the purpose of erecting a city hall thereon, and that the said lots be, and the same are hereby selected and chosen as a site for a city hall."

Mayor Thornton was about to put the resolution when Alderman Walkup addressed the chair, and made a speech opposing the proposition. He held that the proposed site was not central enough to the business part of town for a fire department, and especially for a volunteer department. He thought that there were many other sites available that were more central, just as cheap and would be more acceptable to citizens generally.

Alderman Leiser defended his resolution by saying that Alderman Walkup seemed to think that Anaconda is as big now as it will ever be, and to have forgotten that the town is growing more to the east and north, than that there is ground platted in these directions soon to be utilized and on the market which throw Cedar street and Commercial avenue practically and literally in the heart of the city. The council, he said, was looking to the future as well as to the present needs of the city.

The question was then voted upon and all the members present, except Alderman Walkup, voted aye. They were Aldermen Shovlin, Rom, Lappan, Morris, Cox and Leiser.

Alderman Shovlin filed strenuous objections to the board bill of city prisoners. He declared the hoboers were living too high entirely, and he thought that bread and water was fare plenty good for them. For the city offenders, of course, it was right they should be given square meals, but he did not believe in encouraging hoboers to get in jail by feeding them on the best in the land, such as Anaconda's workmen have in their boarding houses at $25 per month. After a short discussion Chief White was given to understand that a bread and water diet, bread from the bakers and water from the tap, was fare sufficient for transitory prisoners.

Ordinances were introduced establishing special improvement district No. 1, and also establishing curb lines through the city at 12 feet from the lot line of all streets. On streets and avenues south of and including Third street property owners are given permission to set out shade trees within the curb line. The ordinances were referred to the judiciary committee.

A committee from the fire department was given the privilege of the floor and Chief Hasley, as spokesman, asked for assistance in sending three delegates to Great Falls to the State Firemen's association. The council were favorably disposed, but took the matter under advisement with reference to their legal right to make the appropriation.

Second hand dealers filed a protest against paying the $25 license fee for carrying on their business, which they claim is out of proportion to other businesses and that they only pay $1 to the county. Alderman Walkup suggested that the matter be referred to the ways and means committee.

Alderman Leiser made a very sensible motion when he moved that the entire license ordinance be referred to the committee on ways and means for revision and correction. Many errors and excessive taxes exist in this ordinance, and this seemed the best way out of a difficulty in which the council had found itself. The motion was duly seconded and passed.

The Anaconda Townsite company presented an agreement to the council whereby the company gives permission to the city formally for the use of the ground whereon now stands the fire hall, the city pound and the city dump, city agreeing to vacate upon 30 days' notice from the company. The agreement was duly accepted.

The judiciary committee reported favorably upon the recommendation of the health officer for an ordinance authorizing the gathering of vital statistics, and recommended that the city attorney be instructed to prepare such an ordinance.

Ben Falk asked permission to remove the iron-plated office building known as the English block to a lot on Front street. The petition was referred to the fire committee.

A petition from the expressmen of the city asked for protection from the encroachments of drivers of delivery wagons, who, they assert, are hauling trunks and making charges therefor without paying. The petition was referred to the city treasurer, as tax collector, and to the chief of police for the enforcement of the license ordinance.

Mayor Thornton nominated Matt Dubrey to act as city clerk during the absence of City Clerk O'Leary from the city. The council confirmed the appointment unanimously. Mr. Dubrey caught on readily to his duties and filled the position as though he had been city clerk for years. Senator E. D. Matts was appointed city attorney pro tem.

ALL OVER "ALL OVER"

A Picture That Caused a Decided Sensation.

AND THREE SUITS IN COURT

Nobody Knows Who Owns the Painting, but a Lot of People Want It for Cash, Board Bills and the Like.

Some days ago a picture was hung in Foskett's saloon by the artist, J. W. Duckworth. It was beautifully framed, and many admired the picture. There seemed to be a story to it. The central figure was a young woman, clad in flowing robes of white, standing before a dressing table, evidently in her boudoir. She is holding a handkerchief to her lips and is gazing down pensively at an array of bottles upon the table as though she had a bad case of tooth ache. Her ear, which stands out in bold relief from the background of a slat of red, that is supposed to represent auburn hair, is carefully twisted to one side, and looks as though it might fall off, but it does not. The maiden is holding daintily in her fingers a photograph over the flame of a candle, such as all beds or the present age keep burning in their bedrooms to preserve their complexions from the glare of the electric lights and kerosene lamps. Slowly but surely the lower edge of the picture has burned and blackened in the flame. Still above the blaze and smoke can be distinguished the features of a well known and handsome man about town. The picture in the picture is extremely life-like. No one who knows the young man has any difficulty in recognizing him; it is the one redeeming feature of the picture. Close scrutiny reveals that it is, indeed, an excellent likeness, and is clipped from a genuine photo and pasted on the canvas. Unlike the lady's ear, the photo is liable to fall off the canvas, but will not if the paste used was good. It is not known that this young man ever gave any young lady a toothache, and he is too good-natured to drive any belle to suicide, as might be implied by the painting. The gentleman is still a bachelor, and no girl has any right to think that all is over; she might get him yet, so it cannot be that "all is over," as the little card stuck in the frame says. Critics, therefore, have decided that it is only a case of toothache. He that as it may, the woman in white robes stands by the mirror and waits for death or the dentist. That is the picture not for the story.

No one was found in Anaconda who had means, artistic taste or inclination to buy the picture. The artist, therefore, decided to raffle it, and tickets were issued. A number were sold, and Saturday night the lots were to be drawn.

The box and dice were prepared when suddenly Mitch Pickle descended upon the crowd and upon the picture. He had an attachment for the painting and must have $68.70 or the lady. After some hustling a bond was given for the amount which was required to satisfy Mr. Reynolds' bond bill.

All was then serene, the raffle went on, but before it was over Constable Burke came in and insisted that a little bill held by H. H. Logan for a picture frame worth $20 be paid or he would put into force and effect Judge Conroy's attachment for the lady. This pressed the limit, Duckworth refused to settle and Constable Burke carried away the picture to Justice Conroy's office.

The trial of the suit was to have been had yesterday, but now comes Ted Harrington and with a writ of replevin, placed in Constable Pickle's hands, and he carried away the picture, frame and all, for he claimed to be the owner of a certain picture "All Over" and aforesaid.

Thus the matter stands and thus will remain until the courts decide who is the rightful owner of the painting "All Over." Those who have studied the picture say the girl is only changing her mind, since she has found out she is so popular, and has decided to give the burning portrait man the shake, and to transfer her affections to Ted Harrington or some of the other fellows who have so boldly and publicly proclaimed their attachments for her beauty and her person. However, it is still evident that all is not yet over with the artist, the picture and many claimants.

The arrivals at the Montana yesterday were: Eldron Brittain, Oregon; John Hoagland, Billings; A. J. Knight, city; H. Jenter, Chicago; G. B. Hevenden, Cleveland; Miss Leadbeater, Philadelphia; J. M. White, Butte; C. Husted, New York; M. Howard, San Francisco; C. R. Gilbert, Butte; H. Garvey, St. Louis; Henry C. Smith, New York; Leopold F. Schmidt, Deer Lodge; G. T. Davis, Missoula; C. C. Grand Junction, Col., Sept. 4.—The fifth annual Peach Day celebration drew over 1,000 visitors to this city, among whom were Governor McIntyre, Senator Teller, Congressman Bell and Shafroth. Speeches were made by the two congressmen. The display of fine fruit was astonishing, even to the residents. Over 15 tons of fruit were given away.
